

RESILIENCE BONDS

- Resilience Bonds can help local, state, and federal government agencies and international development banks make the leap from disaster relief to resilience. Resilience Bonds are a variation on standard catastrophe bonds that connect financial protections in the form of catastrophe insurance with investments in on-the-ground risk reduction projects, like seawalls or building retrofits.
- Making the link between short-term disaster risk reduction and long-term resilience can help local leaders make major investments to protect their communities.